interest to secured creditors and their counsel.

The client, the lawyer, the service provider, and the hacker: one is different from the others. Law firms are data companies with professional responsibilities in addition to legal obligations. Yet, as an industry, they continue to struggle in the face of increasing risks from cybersecurity failures. Ransomware, phishing, and business email compromise attacks take turns in being the top threat of any given year. And generative AI tools in the hands of hackers are making life worse. This presentation will review the threat landscape, remind of the importance of understanding data inventories and the lifecycles of that data, and recommend best practices to tackle the critical components of a law firm's cybersecurity compliance program.
